

FARM BUREAU
GEORGIA

HAY FACTS

Hay is one of Georgia's top crops. Farmers grow hay to feed animals like cows, goats, sheep, and horses. It's made from grasses and legumes like Bermudagrass and alfalfa. Hay is cut, dried, and baled during the warmer months—usually from spring through fall. Without hay, many farm animals wouldn't have enough to eat, especially in the winter.

FARM BUREAU
GEORGIA

HAY FACTS

Hay is one of Georgia's top crops. Farmers grow hay to feed animals like cows, goats, sheep, and horses. It's made from grasses and legumes like Bermudagrass and alfalfa. Hay is cut, dried, and baled during the warmer months—usually from spring through fall. Without hay, many farm animals wouldn't have enough to eat, especially in the winter.

FARM BUREAU
GEORGIA

HAY FACTS

Hay is one of Georgia's top crops. Farmers grow hay to feed animals like cows, goats, sheep, and horses. It's made from grasses and legumes like Bermudagrass and alfalfa. Hay is cut, dried, and baled during the warmer months—usually from spring through fall. Without hay, many farm animals wouldn't have enough to eat, especially in the winter.

FARM BUREAU
GEORGIA

HAY FACTS

Hay is one of Georgia's top crops. Farmers grow hay to feed animals like cows, goats, sheep, and horses. It's made from grasses and legumes like Bermudagrass and alfalfa. Hay is cut, dried, and baled during the warmer months—usually from spring through fall. Without hay, many farm animals wouldn't have enough to eat, especially in the winter.