

In Georgia, many sheep are raised for meat, like lamb and mutton, instead of wool. Sheep are helpful on farms because they eat grass and weeds, which keeps pastures healthy. Some farms even use sheep to graze around solar panels to keep the grass trimmed! Sheep are smart animals—they can remember other sheep's faces for years. Baby sheep are called lambs, and they can stand and walk just minutes after they're born!