

Muscadines are a special type of grape that grow really well in Georgia's warm weather. They grow on vines and are picked from late summer through early fall. Muscadines can be purple, bronze, or green, and they have thick skins. In Georgia, people use muscadines to make jelly, juice, and even ice cream! Georgia is one of the top muscadine-producing states in the country.