

Did you know astronauts grow plants in space? Since there's no soil or rain in space, they use special lights, water systems, and grow boxes inside the space station. Plants help clean the air and give astronauts fresh food. NASA has grown lettuce, radishes, zinnias, and even chili peppers in space. Growing plants in space helps scientists learn how to farm on other planets one day—maybe even Mars!