

The earthworm is one of nature's best soil helpers!

Worms make tunnels that help air and water move through the soil. They also break down things like leaves and grass into nutrients that plants need. When worms eat, they leave behind castings—these are like worm poop and they make great fertilizer for plants!